

KENTUCKY AND WINN

Under the above caption the Lexington Herald of Tuesday had the following:

The selection of Jack Winn, of Mt. Sterling, former star bigman of the Princeton football eleven and line coach at the University of Kentucky during the past season, to succeed Head Coach William Jewell as chief of the Wildcat staff of strategists for 1923, comes as a popular choice not only to the university undergraduates and football squad, but also to every Kentuckian who has the least interest of the state and its leading institution at heart.

Jack Winn came to the university at a critical time. The squad has good line material, but it had few men who knew the tricks of a line man's trade well enough consistently to plug the holes in the front rank. Starting with a line that appeared ragged against the attacks of the mediocre University of Cincinnati backfield early in the season, Jack Winn developed a forward wall that, later in the season, stopped every opposing backfield man in the south with the lone exception of the incomparable "Red" Roberts of Centre—one of the greatest line plungers that ever stepped on a football field. The same line, more than any other factor, was responsible for the victories over Sewanee and Alabama and the low scores to which Centre, Tennessee and the unbeaten Vanderbilt team were held.

For 1923 the Wildcats have the best prospects in the last decade. With the regulars of the 1922 squad and the freshman eleven, champions of the south, from which to select material, Jack Winn has a golden opportunity to build up a team that will earn the highest honors in southern football.

Significant to Kentuckians is the fact that practically every member of the prospective 1923 squad is a Kentuckian. Centre built its wonder team around a nucleus of Texans. But Kentucky's university, with a team of Kentuckians and a Kentucky coach, will not need Texans next year. The Wildcats are out for a southern championship—and they intend to win it with a Kentucky team.

EUGENE O'BRIEN IN PERSON

The advance sale of seats for Eugene O'Brien's personal appearance in Robert L. Dempster's new play, "Steve," will open at the Ada Meade Theatre, Lexington, December 27, and as the engagement for the famous stage and screen celebrity is limited it would not be wise to delay in purchasing tickets. While personal appearances of photoplay favorites have been in vogue for some time, this is the first time that Eugene O'Brien has been seen here as the star of a stage success. George M. Gatta is responsible for the return to the speaking stage of O'Brien. Robert L. Dempster is responsible for the charming romantic comedy and Laura Hope

Crews is responsible for the excellent staging of the play. Mrs. Thomas Whiffen is the chief support in the perfect cast which comprises Vivian Ogden, Helen Weir, Ann Winston, Isabel Winlocke, Frank Herbert, Homer Barton, Phillip Lord, F. G. Paten and others. The play will be seen January 1 and 2 with a special matinee on New Year's day.
